		The MASTER Teacher

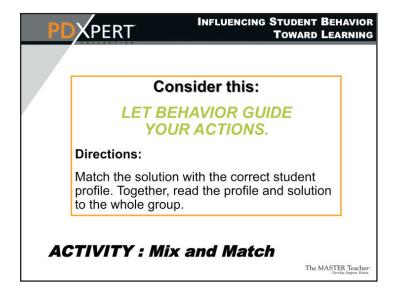

Everyone makes mistakes. Remind your students that everyone makes mistakes.

Making mistakes is how people learn. You must believe—and consequently, teach your students to believe—that making mistakes is one of the most effective ways in which people learn.

Learn from your mistakes; don't deny or defend them. How quickly and in what anner you react to your mistakes is a key issue. You can't profit from mistakes you on't learn from or, worse, mistakes you deny or defend.

Activity: Mix and Match

Allow 10 minutes for this activity.

Objectives: This activity aims to create an awareness of unique individual cases that educators may encounter in a classroom setting. This activity will teach participants about the interconnectivity of encouragement strategies and how consultation and collaboration with other educators can help clarify an individual student's needs in terms of encouragement and motivation.

Materials: Activity Sheet 3: Mix and Match

Before starting the activity: Let the participants ponder the statement, "Let behavior guide your actions." Read aloud these two questions:

- 1. How does letting student behaviors guide your actions help you become a better educator?
- 2. How can you keep from compromising your expectations for an assignment or a behavior?

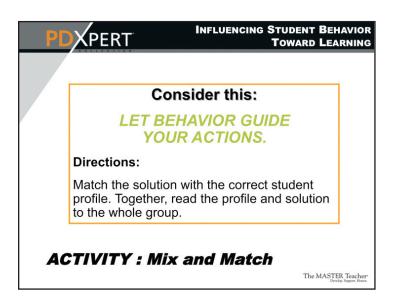

Tell them to keep these two questions in mind while completing the activity. Give them 1 minute to reflect on the questions.

Instructions: Hand out cutouts of Activity Sheet 3: Mix and Match to the participants. (If there are more cutouts than participants, make sure that you distribute matching profiles and solutions. If there are more participants than cutouts, give profiles and solutions to pairs instead of individuals.)

Tell the participants to find the cutout that matches the half they hold.

When everyone has sorted out their cutouts and paired up, ask the pairs to read aloud their cutouts together to the whole group.

Debrief: After each pair has read aloud the profile and solution, take a minute or two to evaluate the scenario in an open forum with the participants. You can entertain brief questions about how the participants can adapt the strategies to similar situations that they have experienced.

Future Use: Create an online discussion group for the participants where they can share their insights on the encouragement strategies as they apply them in their teaching methods. Encourage them to share success stories of students as well as situations that may require collaboration between educators and higher-ranking administrative staff.

Remember that the encouragement strategies presented in the workshop are broad and general. Further discussion, analysis, and practical application thoroughly examined by peers will greatly benefit both educator and student.

"Think About It" Exercise

Have staff complete this exercise to begin implementing what they learned during the workshop. Distribute this document to staff by attaching the file to the Next Day Follow-Up Email, or make copies for the staff.
